

Ask Wayne

Dear Wayne

I've heard it expressed that there are a couple of ways of going about creating a living. There are prepackaged careers that one can just step into and there are careers that are crafted a piece at a time, take longer to create but offer so much more freedom and flexibility.

I choose a prepackaged career (I am a nurse) but now I am finding that I would like to experience something more flexible. How would I go about beginning the process of building a crafted career? I am asking you this because it appears that you have done it as do most of the others in this fine magazine.

Sincerely
Joan T
Thunder Bay, ON

Hi Joan!

What a great question and thanks for asking... living free is what the desire is here.

It is all based on your definition of living free, of course. *LOL*

There is nothing wrong with a prepackaged career but at times it becomes very limiting in many aspects.

I personally retired 7 years ago and then decided I wanted a life of freedom and ease. Real big mistake on my behalf... I did not have a clue what I really, really, really desired let alone did I know anything about The Law of Attraction.

Basically, I did it the hard way to get to where I feel wonderful in what I do every single day of my life today.

So, to answer your question, first of all get real specific about what your passionate desire is. Do not even think about the how to's at this point, just feel your desires, the wants and totally believe in everything you feel. You are in the driver's seat and control what directions you go in.

The more passion you have around something, the more the universe listens to you. Remember, you get what you focus on...

Please note, there is going to be contrast and I repeat, there will be contrast in your new desires. Did I not mention I did it the hard way. Serving Kraft dinner with hot dogs to guests was a real treat for me in some of the early stages of my desires to Live Free. Things did get better as I grew from within.

Focus on what you desire, feel what it would be like if you had it now and the how's will fall into place. The last part is to connect with as many people as you can to ask questions, maybe obtaining some new information etc. Do not be a couch potato; you will be required to take some action steps to move forward.

So the bottom line is to have fun in your newest passion, appreciate any contrast and give gratitude to everything that happens to you. You are amazing in all you do and remember, there is no right or wrong, just more learning.

I can already feel your energy soaring and you make that small shift to what you really desire and feel inside of you.

Till next time...

Peace and Love
Wayne

