

A Visit With Marcelle From Belgium

I have said it often and I still feel the same way. I LOVE THIS ERA! Really, I don't know what I would do without the internet at this point – it gives me so much adventure and freedom. Never before in history could an average girl like me meet so many wonderful people from all over the world without ever leaving home?

Recently, an opportunity exactly like that presented itself when long time internet friend Marcelle della Faille from Belgium decided to make a trip to Toronto, Ontario which is just an hour from where I live.

Wayne, Julie and I piled into the car and drove the hour to the airport filled with excitement that we would be meeting Marcelle and some of the building holiday spirit. It was only a short wait at the airport before Marcelle came through the doors and we exchanged hugs all around.

From the airport, we drove to the local mall to jump on the subway and head to downtown Toronto for lunch and show Marcelle around. It was a beautiful late November day, sunny with a few clouds and an energizing crispness to the air.

When we got off of the subway, we headed for the Eaton's center in search of a restaurant where we could have a good lunch and chat for a while. On our way to lunch, while standing on a corner waiting for the traffic lights to change, the most startling thing happened. Around the corner came a police escort, followed by a military convoy, proudly showing off the Grey Cup, kicking off a week of celebrations leading up to the final game of the Canadian Football League.

The Eaton Center in Toronto is a massive mall that puts a lot of time and energy – not to mention expense – in decorating for the holidays. It was a pleasant walk with much glitter and fun to see and we finally settled on a restaurant.

We had a wonderful lunch, sharing stories and experiences. It was fascinating to learn how Marcelle has used the principles of LOA to create many wonderful opportunities for herself. She is now a published author of French Law of Attraction books and soon, she will be sold in China as well. ☺ Drop by

After lunch we wandered the downtown core. Eaton's creates some of the most beautiful and compelling holiday window scenes I have ever had the privilege of viewing so we wandered around and looked in the windows. The scenes we saw were varied from wistful and romantic to cute and traditional.

We had a really great time; it is just so much fun to add a face to face element to an already wonderful relationship.

It was a nice, fun and peaceful day of 4 friends just enjoying each others company.

In all adventure, there comes a time when the day must close. Marcelle had to make a plane back to Montreal where she was staying for a book show, so we jumped back on the subway to where our car was parked and drove to the airport. After saying our goodbyes and promising to get together again, we drove off as the sun set; a brilliant end to a beautiful day!!
