

From the Balcony

The months between September and January have been a very introspective time for us and it has shown up that way on every level.

Anything that would be an example of looking outward is in short supply, including photographs of the wondrous beauty that nature provides us just out side of our balcony doors.

We did however manage to catch a couple of storms to offer you like this wonderful photograph of lightening captured before the trees dropped their leaves for the coming winter season.

Here you see the stunning whiteness of fresh fallen snow during the first winter storm of the season.

This storm graced us with its presence a couple of Sunday's before Christmas. I really put us in the Christmas spirit as it is a thing of beauty to watch the snow fall.
