

Wayne's Blast from The Past

It all started back in 1953, the year of the Black Snake, when I began this lifetime, my current adventure.

Through the Ozzie and Harriet era, into the revolutionary 60's, the searching 70's, the lost generation years in the 80's, the consumerism of the 90's and finally into the new millennium with expansive growth and learning. Talk about many themes in life to play on.

The fifties.....

Embedded deep within me I have my memories of this era but mostly only photographic ones. I was the cute little, blonde hair, big brown eyed kid that was always seeking adventure. I do remember that my life was being played in the moment during those early years and it felt so good. There is a great quote I have always loved by comic, Steven Wright - "The older you get, the more you learn to see what you've been taught to see. When you're a kid, you see what's there".

What a path I have been on. As a so called army brat, bouncing around every few years to a new city, friends, schools etc., life may have seemed very unsettling to most, but not me! I embraced each new move with enthusiasm and adventure. The one thing I learned along this glorious path was that making new and wonderful connections felt good to me. For the past 5-6 years I have been using the catch phrase, "The Master of Connection" and that is (to express in its simplest terms) what I am.

You know the old statement, "if you remember the sixties, you never really lived them". I can honestly say that I do remember a fair portion of the sixties but intertwined in there are many fuzzy or blank areas. So I have come to the conclusion that – I had a blast in the sixties.

During the 60's and 70's I had some of my most profound and creative ideas to date. I was on a roll, as were most others. Freedom, Woodstock, down with the establishment and peace rallies were not the only thing that jumps out in my mind; I believe that I started my real path of the Law of Attraction way back then, but I really wasn't putting a label on it or any specific thought to what I was learning.

Today I tend to call it my life, my magic, my path, but back then, it was just me becoming more aware of who I was and directions I desired to take in life. I had no idea back then of paths, energies, and thought processes I could use to help make me a better person inside.

I got out of school in the mid seventies but I found myself still searching. I got the corporate job but was still constantly playing and having fun. For most of my corporate career, those teenage years were weighing heavy and I desired something more for me than I had while I was growing up. I bought into the beliefs of my elders that I heard so many times as a kid and followed the prescribed path to success. Get an education, find a good job, find a partner for marriage and work hard to retirement.

I would be the first to say that the whole idea was a fit for me at the time and continued to be for the next 25 years of corporate. Of course there were lots of great times and many, many amazing connections, stories and memories. On the other side of the coin, there was also lots of contrast.

Throughout that whole period of my life, there was something that continued to eat away at me inside, although I never found out what it was until 2001. I desired to create a life of freedom and ease, where I could play, have an abundance of fun and still be within my own values of maintaining self and serving others for the highest good of all.

I finally made that decision in 2001, with the great wisdom of my partner Kat, to move forward with what I desired in life. To date I have been living the life I chose to create every single day. That Law of Attraction or whatever I called it way back when is now and has been my life's path for six totally awesome years. Sure there have been many days, weeks or even months, of things not going as expected but over time I have taken the lessons learned and processed them and even reprocessed them to a point that I love what I do daily and love all the people that are showing up in my life in perfect timing.

So, my life is a blast and in the following issues, I will continue to exchange energies with you, the readers, to expose more of this Master of Connection.

Till next time.....

Peace and Love
